

Facts about California State University, San Bernardino (CSUSB)

Established in 1965, CSUSB is a public university located in San Bernardino, California. The main campus spans 441 acres at the foothills of the San Bernardino Mountains, with a branch campus in Palm Desert that opened in 1986. CSUSB offers more than 70 undergraduate and graduate degree programs across various fields, including business, education, sciences, arts, humanities, and social sciences.

As of Fall 2024, CSUSB has a student population of approximately 17,900. Notably, 78% of students are first-generation college attendees, and 70% identify as Hispanic, reflecting the university's commitment to serving diverse communities. CSUSB is classified as an 'R2: Doctoral University - High research activity' by the Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education, indicating a significant level of research output.

The university emphasizes community involvement through various programs, including partnerships with local businesses and hosting events like the annual Latino Education and Advocacy Days Summit. CSUSB is home to the Robert and Frances Fullerton Museum of Art, which houses a collection of over 1,200 objects spanning from ancient to contemporary art. The campus also features state-of-the-art classrooms, research labs, and athletic facilities.

The university's athletic teams, known as the Coyotes, compete in NCAA Division II as part of the California Collegiate Athletic Association. The women's volleyball team has achieved significant success, including multiple conference titles and a national championship. CSUSB offers a variety of student services aimed at supporting academic success, including tutoring, counseling, career services, and programs specifically designed for first-generation and low-income students.

Facts about California State University, San Bernardino (CSUSB)

The university is committed to sustainability, implementing initiatives such as a bike-sharing program, a community garden, and efforts to reduce water usage across campus. CSUSB contributes significantly to the local economy, with an annual statewide economic impact of more than half a billion dollars and generating over $32 million in yearly statewide tax revenue.

CSUSB offers over 70 undergraduate and graduate degree programs through its six colleges, including the College of Arts and Letters, the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, and the Jack H. Brown College of Business and Public Administration. Every eligible CSUSB academic program has received national accreditation, reflecting the university's commitment to academic excellence.

CSUSB has a diverse student body with around 20,000 students enrolled from various backgrounds. The university is committed to providing access to higher education for underserved and first-generation students and has been recognized as a Hispanic-Serving Institution.

The university is dedicated to research and scholarship, with faculty engaged in various research projects in fields such as health disparities, environmental science, and social justice. CSUSB has also established itself as a leader in cybersecurity education, beginning its program in 2007.

CSUSB emphasizes community involvement through various programs, including partnerships with local businesses and hosting events like the annual Latino Education and Advocacy Days Summit. The university is home to the Robert and Frances Fullerton Museum of Art, which houses a collection of over 1,200 objects spanning from ancient to contemporary art.

Facts about California State University, San Bernardino (CSUSB)

CSUSB's athletic teams, known as the Coyotes, compete in NCAA Division II as part of the California Collegiate Athletic Association. The women's volleyball team has achieved significant success, including multiple conference titles and a national championship.

The university offers a variety of student services aimed at supporting academic success, including tutoring, counseling, career services, and programs specifically designed for first-generation and low-income students. CSUSB is committed to sustainability, implementing initiatives such as a bike-sharing program, a community garden, and efforts to reduce water usage across campus.

The university contributes significantly to the local economy, with an annual statewide economic impact of more than half a billion dollars and generating over $32 million in yearly statewide tax revenue. As of Fall 2024, CSUSB has a student population of approximately 17,900.

Notably, 78% of students are first-generation college attendees, and 70% identify as Hispanic, reflecting the university's commitment to serving diverse communities. CSUSB offers more than 70 undergraduate and graduate degree programs across various fields, including business, education, sciences, arts, humanities, and social sciences.

The university is classified as an 'R2: Doctoral University - High research activity' by the Carnegie Classification of Institutions of Higher Education. CSUSB emphasizes community involvement through programs and events that support educational advancement and civic engagement.

The campus includes modern research labs and academic buildings. In addition to educational facilities, the university promotes inclusivity, innovation, and sustainability through its curriculum and campus initiatives.

Facts about California State University, San Bernardino (CSUSB)